Formulating a Plan of Life for Lent and Beyond
by Father Roger J. Landry ... continued

We can focus on the basic Christian plan, praying, fasting and giving alms. Jesus summons us to follow him by imitating his bold example of praying and fasting in the desert for 40 days and nights and in giving himself to others to the last drop of his blood. The more we sacrifice ourselves and our belongings for others' good, the less prone we will be to giving in to the devil's seductions to seek power or control over them.

1) prayer. If God is truly first in our lives, we will want to commit to making the loving dialogue with God our foremost priority. We make time for prayer.

2) fasting. Fasting helps us to say No to the devil's temptations to prioritize our stomachs over our souls. It helps us control our desires rather than let them control us.

3) almsgiving. Our biggest spiritual cancer often flows from selfishness or egocentrism. That is why the Lord commands us to give alms; to look toward others' needs, not just our own; to love others in deeds and not just wish them well; and to take responsibility for others' welfare, for as often as we fail to do something for them, we fail to care for Christ (Matthew 25:45).

How charitable should we be? We should try to give more than our surplus time or resources, but extend ourselves like the widow with her mite, something that will conform us to Christ's standard of loving generosity. We should also be deliberate about our charity, not just engaging in "random acts of kindness," but having a concerted game plan of self-sacrifice.

Championships often depend on the work done to form the habits that lead to greatness. Catholics would similarly profit from using Lent to jump-start the plan to form the habits that lead to virtue and ultimately to the eternal "Hall of Fame."
